THE BIRTH OF MIRA MOVEMENT

In the 1930s, the education scenario in India was not promising. The more Sadhu Vaswani reflected on it, the more he felt that the current education system was failing to serve the state and society. Imbued himself in the ideals of rishis of ancient India, he was deeply saddened to see the education of the 20th century moving farther away from those values and ideals.

As he surveyed this situation, a deep sadness crept into his soul. Schools and colleges, he said to himself, must be freed from alien influences, and the ideals that inspired education in Ancient India must be rediscovered and introduced in our institutions – if India was to make its contribution to human civilization and add to the freshness of human life in the future.

In conversation with his devotees, one day he expressed his opinion that what India needed most was a New Education. This was met with great enthusiasm from earnest volunteers, who felt that the Master would indeed, be rendering a great service to the society by starting such a movement.

THE DIVINE CALL

Thus, it happened, that on the evening of 3rd June, 1933 as he paced to and fro on his terrace with a far-away, dreamy look in his mystic eyes, he heard within him, a voice urging him to initiate new lines in education.

It was a stupendous task. It would need a lot of money. He put his hand into his shirt pocket and drew out his purse. There was a two-paise coin in it. That was all the money he had with him at that moment.

Solemnly, he handed over the two-paise coin to Mrs. Parpati Malkani, the Secretary of the Sakhi Satsang. "Our new school will be started with this blessed two-paise coin," he told the assembled devotees. These words have gone down in golden letters in the history, thereby leading to the birth of the Mira Movement in Education.

Again, the Voice spoke, "Give all you have – and the All-in-all will not fail you!" In the early hours of the dawn of 4th June, 1933 amidst the chanting of vedic mantras, he kindled the sacred Havan fire, and announced the opening of St. Mira's School for Girls at Hyderabad-Sind.
